Editors' Note

We are excited about this special release, featuring articles in both Spanish and English, highlighting the unique work of narrative therapists from Chile and Argentina. The first article, “¿Cómo Hacemos lo que Hacemos? (How We Do What We Do)” written by Ítalo Latorre-Gentoso, highlights how Pranas applied and adapted narrative therapy in a Chilean context. The article by Ítalo is in many ways written as a response to a previous article by Jeff Zimmerman entitled “Narrative Orthodoxy and Hegemonic Power: An Evolutionary Perspective.” In order to help readers better appreciate what Ítalo is responding to, we have decided to publish a translated version of Jeff’s article in the Spanish version of this release.

The second article, “Conversaciones Centradas en la Dignidad, la Seguridad y el Cuidado con Personas que Usan Drogas (Conversations Focused on the Dignity, Safety, and Care with People Who Use Drugs)” by Nitsán Pérets, showcases his efforts to use narrative therapy ideas and practices in ways that honor the dignity of people whose lives have been effected by drugs.

Since this release appears in both Spanish and English, the formatting will differ from past releases. Each article will first appear in Spanish with a translated version in English to follow. Don’t forget to read through our “Narrative Therapy News and Training Opportunities” to learn more about how our colleagues in the field are engaging narrative practices in our contemporary world.

Sincerely,

David Epston
